A Plan to Protect Agriculture After This War

For years the tragic results of the expansion of food-producing acreage during World War I has haunted American agriculture. Every farmer, as a matter of patriotism, interrupted his rotation of crops to produce food and more food for our allies and our Allies. Now again in World War II, to feed our soldiers and our Allies and to serve the special demands of war industry, we are dedicating our normal production as a matter of patriotic service.

It seems plain that by the end of this war American farmers will have created a tremendous surplus production power which ordinary peacetime requirements will not absorb.

By the end of 1942 our overall average increase production over the average for the last 10 years will be more than 21 per cent. How then can American agriculture side-step a post-war farm tragedy even worse than that following World War I?

Experiments in Rubber and Other

Our Government is now experimenting with domestic sources for rubber. Some sixty thousand acres are devoted to the production of guayule and castor beans, a source of domestic rubber.

Emergency plants for the production of thousands of tons of synthetic rubber from oil and alcohol are now being constructed.

We have learned how to make paper from slash pine and starch from potatoes. We are learning how to raise medicinal herbs which we formerly imported.

Denial of the use of kapok which we imported from the East Indies and the use of synthetic rubber have been made better life preservers.

More than fifteen thousand different kinds of plants grow in the natural state in the United States. We use less than three hundred of these plants. Farm chemistry will not be complete, nor the post-war problem of agriculture solved until every plant is re-examined in the light of modern science and made to serve its part in contributing to the comfort, happiness and security of our America of the future.

A Plan That Deserves Support. The United States Senate is considering a plan which will require the use of 20 per cent of war profits during the war for the purchase of Recovery Bonds by each company in order to have available the necessary cash to quickly change their business and industrial plants back to peacetime activities at the close of the war and to adjust the employment of their normal number of factory workers.

This percentage of war profits could also be used in a broad plan of research by industrial chemists to develop new uses for products of the farm by our domestic industry.

If our industry has the knowledge and the money in hand to convert production, maintain employment and launch the new products developed by science, we have a reasonable chance to absorb our farm surplus even in the post-war period.

Depression hit our rural areas longer and harder than our industrial areas. Our hope for the security, happiness and prosperity of rural America is at stake. If we can develop this practical plan for taking care of our surplus in the after-war period, we can go forward unafraid in an all-out production effort for the winning of this war and in providing the food necessary for starving people in the after war period. We will know that we have provided an ever-expanding America with new crops and new uses. Worth thinking about.
